1. Throughout the New Testament, the theme of anticipation or immanence is prevalent. The Early Church looked forward to the return of Christ with longing and hope. Today’s American church does not have this kind of anticipation. How can we change this?
2. The Church of Corinth flirted with sin in many areas. This morning’s context was that of meat offered to idols and the attendant temptations. How might Christians do this today? How should we talk about identifying these sorts of things and encourage one another to avoid them?
3. Right doctrinal knowledge is of great importance. It can also lead to an arrogance which exposes one to temptation. What more does a Christian need to be able to resist temptation?
